

IDMP & IAHS Working Group: Drought in the Anthropocene (DitA)

Who is DitA? Active science group investigating interaction between drought & people. Studying the influence of people on drought, the impact of drought on people and the feedbacks between drought and society.

Some ideas on how DitA can contribute:

- Linking science to policy: joint development of policy briefs/messages from recent science (papers), distributed through IDMP network
- Contribute experiences from case studies – active research
- Contribution of DitA researchers to Drought Resilience+10: organisation of science discussion of workstreams; presenting science state-of-the-art
- Addressing main research themes coming out of questions community poses to IDMP-helpdesk – co-defining research that is relevant to practice

Would be great to hear your thoughts? – what contributions would you like to see from group like DitA to IDMP & Community of Practice?
